Showers also were likely along the western edge of that moist air from eastern Texas into southern Missouri.

An extension of the ribbon of humid air produced clouds over the Northeast, with light snow showers over parts of northern New York state and central New England.

Elsewhere, a cold front ushered a new wave of frigid air into the western Great Lakes and northern Plains. Morning lows were below zero in northern sections of North Dakota and Minnesota and afternoon temperatures were mostly in the teens and 20s.

The cold generated some light snow around the Great Lakes early in the day.

Temperatures also dipped below zero in northern Maine.

Monday's temperatures around the Lower 48 states ranged from a morning low of 11 below zero at Clayton Lake, Maine, to an early afternoon reading of 82 at Fort Lauderdale and Fort Myers, Fla.
