FUNERAL OF DR. T. B. WILSON, ACCIDENTALLY SHOT BY HIS SON, WILL BE HELD IN PUEBLO

The body of Dr. T. B. Wilson, former Pueblo chiropractor and widely known here, whose tragic death in Denver Tuesday night was announced here Wednesday morning, arrived in Pueblo last night for burial. Funeral arrangements have not yet been completed and announcements will be made later by the United Davis-Forles Undertaking company.

Struck in the head by a bullet fired accidentally from a rifle in the hands of his son, Aldean, 21, student at University of Denver dental school, and graduate from Centennial high school, Dr. Wilson is believed to have died instantly. He was lying on a bed in his Denver apartments while Aldean, known here as "Dean," was cleaning the rifle, preparing to use it on a hunting and fishing trip the next morning. The accident occurred about 1 o'clock. Rex Wilson, Centennial high school student, another son of Dr. Wilson, was in the room with his brother. Both boys were prostrated.

Grief-stricken, Aldean told Denver detectives how the shooting had occurred. He said the gun was supposed to be empty and he wah manipulating the lever of the rifle when the hammer fell, discharging the firearm. His father moaned and was dead. For a short interval the two boys did not realize that Dr. Wilson was killed. Then the made frantic efforts to revive life, but failed.

The charge from the 25-35 rifle, which the boys borrowed from a friend here, entered the left side of Dr. Wilson's face, emerged thru the top of the head and lodged in the wall behind the bed.

Mrs. Wilson and her two other sons, Dr. Philip of Pueblo and Dr. Shannon of Canon City, were notified of the tragedy shortly after midnight and immediately left for Denver. Mrs. Wilson was not informed of the manner in which her husband met death until after she arrived in Denver.

Aldean and Rex left Pueblo Monday for Denver, where they met their father, before going on a hunting trip. Tuesday night they both attended a prize fight in Denver and returning late in the evening started to prepare for the trip which ended so tragically.

Dr Wilson practiced in Pueblo for many years with offices in the Amherst building. He was for a time practicing with his two sons, Drs. Philip and Shannon. Several months ago he moved to Denver and was prominent in professional circles there. He was a Mason and an Elk.
