CELEBRATING 50 YEARS OF PUEBLO WEST

The 'downtown' of Pueblo West grew around library

By Anthony Sandstrom
The Pueblo West View

Fifty years ago, any visions of a "downtown" in Pueblo West was supposed to involve the Pueblo West Inn, the Desert Hawk Golf Course, and other things that served as the center of the planned Pueblo West community.

But two decades after that original planned community gave way to the self-governed community that Pueblo West eventually became, progress forged a whole new "downtown" in a somewhat unlikely way.

Instead of a public square with hospitality and business at its center, Civic Center Park, attached to the Pueblo West Library, became that square. Today, it's the center of the community, literally and figuratively, and it grew out of a need for education and community rather than commerce.

And it all began when the Pueblo City-County Library District filled a need in Pueblo West.

The White Branch Library

Pueblo West was without a traditional library until the community was nearly 30 years old.

In 1997, the White Branch Library was constructed, and was a modest space, only about 5,000 square feet. It was in the same location as the modern-day Pueblo West Library, and today, in the northern wing of the current Pueblo West Library, its largest meeting and community room on the north end of the building was all that housed the White Branch.

LIBRARY

Despite being the smallest library branch in the entire district, the White Branch quickly outgrew its space and its patron base.

By 2005, an increasing amount of material circulated through the tiny branch. Aside from the flagship Rawlings Library location, the White Branch handled the most material in the library system.

It prompted a new approach to serve Pueblo West.

"(In 2005) we looked at our entire service area to make a sort of strategic plan," Pueblo City-County Library District Executive Director Jon Walker said. "That process involved looking at library standards of service, and some of those standards showed that Pueblo West was underserved. That plan showed that we needed some larger capacity in Pueblo West."

In that 2005 strategic plan, an expansion of Pueblo West's library was at the top of the list.

In 2009, an expansion to the current 27,000-square-foot facility took place, and not only does it still have the second-highest circulation of materials in the district, but it's also the second-largest branch in terms of area, only behind the Rawlings Library.

The Civic Center

The land around the Pueblo West Library was always intended to be a "civic center."

In 2009, when the library expansion was completed, there was a large swath of unimproved land behind the new building. That land was kept in the Pueblo West Metropolitan District's land portfolio as a site for potential civic buildings and other uses.

But a portion of that land was granted over to the Pueblo City-County Library District, and from there, a partnership continued to grow.

In 2013, the surrounding park was landscaped by the Pueblo West metro district, with bathrooms and amphitheaters added. During the second phase, the playground and splash park, potentially the most popular offering in the park, was added.

The rationale behind the park was, not only serving as a complement to the new library, but also to give Pueblo West a second flagship park in addition to Lovell Park, which had served Pueblo West since the 1970s.

"We needed another place to have community events," Pueblo West Parks and Recreation Director Carol Cosby said. "Lovell Park was pretty maxed out, so we looked at a bigger park, a place more for things like concerts and big events."

social centers for most communities. Instead, it all arose from the community's need and want for intellectual and outdoor pursuits.

There are no businesses or shopping at the center of this area, as is the case with the social centers for most communities. Instead, it all arose from the community's need and want for intellectual and outdoor pursuits.

"There was a need for a place for people to enjoy the outdoors," Cosby said, "and that's what it has become. The library uses (the park) for their events, too, and it's become a great thing in our community."

LOCAL BRIEFS

InfoZone museum to host Ideas at Work exhibit

Ideas at Work: Innovation at the Depot exhibit will be on display Friday-June 2 in the InfoZone Museum on the fourth floor of Robert Hoag Rawlings Public Library, 100 E. Abriendo Ave.

A collaborative project between Pueblo City-County Library District and Colorado State University-Pueblo, the exhibit shares the stories of Pueblo Ordnance Depot employees whose ideas and innovation allowed the depot to thrive, starting in the 1940s to present day.

A public reception will be held at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday in the InfoZone Museum.

The exhibit and reception both are free and open to the public. Refreshments will be provided.

Ideas at Work is a continuation of the March of 2018 exhibit, She's a WOW: Women Ordnance Workers in Pueblo, CO 1942-1945.

NOTES

Xcel Energy donates to library's planned Steel exhibit

The Xcel Energy Foundation awarded a $20,000 grant to the Pueblo City-County Library District in support of the development of a new local touring exhibit called Exploring Steel, Energy and the West.

The exhibit will be developed in partnership with the library district's Special Collections and Museum Services. The exhibit will travel to each of the district's seven libraries. It also will take turns at other cultural and educational institutions in the region, including Salida, Alamosa and elsewhere.

The exhibit will feature the history of Colorado Fuel and Iron and EVRAZ steel manufacturing in Pueblo and the region. It will also focus on the role of energy and electricity in the story of manufacturing steel and iron, and how they played a critical role in the economic and social development of the American West from the 19th century into the future, as well as a more recent look at the energy industry's transition from coal to renewables.

"The library district is very pleased to have Xcel Energy's vital support for this special project to document and share with the public the important history in this region and, even, nationally and internationally, of Pueblo's steel manufacturing legacy and the critical role energy plays in this," library district executive director Jon Walker said in a statement.

Xcel Energy chief executive Ben Fowke said in a statement, "Libraries are a cornerstone for all vibrant, growing communities. We're pleased to partner with Pueblo's library district on a traveling exhibit showcasing the region's rich energy history and the important role it played in shaping this vital national industry."
