Striving for the best

Jon Walker

by Jon Walker

The Pueblo City-County Library District seeks to provide the best possible library service for our citizens. We accomplish this partly through deep understanding of the community we serve. This includes scrutinizing local demographics to comprehend the quantifiable characteristics of the local populace, working with focus groups and community surveys for direct feedback from our citizens and studying public library industry trends to ensure we are current and up-to-date in our approach. These methods are integral to our work culture, including three major studies in 2005, 2009, and 2015; accompanied by additional regular updates involving all key stakeholders.

PCCLD serves a population approaching 165,000 people according to U.S. Census reports. Several major local demographic analyses have been undertaken in recent years. (The current review is available at http://www.pueblolibrary.org/sites/default/files/2015_ALLappendices.pdf.)

Findings of overarching importance include the fact that a significant portion of the service-area population self-identifies as Latino or Hispanic (nearly 43 percent) and the community generally is economically less well off when compared with other areas of the state and the nation. Our median household income, for example, is well below state and national averages. We deliver specific initiatives in response, including PCCLD's Hispanic Resource Center and other programs to help underserved populations such as those targeted for community members with special needs, early literacy programming for parents and other childhood caregivers and gang intervention counseling onsite at the library.

One community member recently wrote this about one of our libraries:

“This letter is written as a recommendation (for) . . . exemplary work in the library system in Pueblo, Colorado . . . The staff not only provides guidance in the valuable tool of reading but they provide a nurturing environment which is often lacking in the family home. In this quadrant of the city, the population is underserved. The . . . community is beset with gangs, prostitution and unemployment. The (library) is a haven for the children and youth because it provides a calm sanctuary of safety . . . Staff provide snacks during the school year and during the summer, in conjunction with the Pueblo City Schools, free meals. Many of these children are being raised by grandparents, single parents, or in some cases another family member. A birthday celebration to them might be a visit to a local fast food restaurant. Staff make sure that a birthday is special by providing a cupcake and a candle and singing them Happy Birthday, and a small gift of love. At the library . . . staff present programs for drug prevention, bullying, gang prevention, and proper social skills. Parents of these young people are also given the same opportunity to participate.”

PCCLD periodically conducts focus group forums. This involves gathering small groups of people together who represent a cross-section of local citizens. A facilitator works with each group to foster discussion about quality of life matters, how the community can be improved, and the role PCCLD can play in helping.

Gathering this information is useful to comprehend how our libraries are perceived and opportunities for us to successfully engage. This effort has resulted in the extrapolation of seven themes. These include expanding PCCLD's role in:

1. Creating young readers
2. Enhancing marketing and communication tools
3. Balancing book reduction and media expansion
4. Providing targeted collections
5. Augmenting adult programming
6. Promoting the library as vital community hub
7. Increasing fundraising awareness and strategies.

Additional themes from stakeholders include descriptions of the public library as a welcoming and happy place along with ideals connecting PCCLD to individual self-improvement, growth and enhancement. We translate these understandings into specific activities resulting in PCCLD's dramatic increase in circulation, digital use, library visits and attendance at library-sponsored cultural and educational classes and events.

An effective tool for learning about our client base derives from customer surveys. PCCLD carries out regular surveys that consistently validate several findings. Respondents overwhelmingly hold a favorable view of the library and positively perceive service offerings. Motifs include the value of the library in early childhood literacy followed by support for lifelong learning, public computing; adult, teen and family literacy; and helping people find, evaluate and effectively use information.

PCCLD builds on these findings to establish impactful and well-received services such as circulation of mobile devices like tablets, laptops, and WiFi hotspots; and providing our community with the nation's most highly attended library-sponsored cultural and educational programs and events.

(A detailed account of a recent PCCLD community survey is available on pages 5-10 at http://www.pueblolibrary.org/sites/default/files/2015_ALLappendices.pdf.)

It is an exciting time for our community and our libraries. Not a day passes when PCCLD is not aggressively pursuing an agenda of positive community impact. We regularly study library industry trends and adopt best practices from our colleagues from across the country. As a result, PCCLD has established itself as a clear leader, not only in our local community but also among public libraries nationally.

PCCLD strives to bring our community a world-class public library experience. Our plan to accomplish this is clear: we care about what we do and we go about our duty with careful dedication and study. The results have been encouraging.
