MORPHINE SUICIDE.

Aged Farmer Dies by His Own Will.

POISON ACTED VERY QUICKLY.

Frederick Crandall In Pueblo On His Way to Denver—Committed the Rash Act in a North Union Avenue Rooming House—Remains Held Awaiting Instructions From Relatives—Lived at Berwind Colorado.

Without giving any intimation of his contemplated deed Frederick Crandall, a resident of Berwind, Colo., committed suicide yesterday afternoon by taking a large dose of morphine. He was found in a rooming house on north Union avenue at 4:15 o'clock and had been dead but a short time. The coroner was notified at once and the body was removed to the morgue. No inquest was held as a half empty morphine bottle in the room occupied by the dead man told plainly how he had died. The deceased was 55 years of age, having lived for the last twelve years near Berwind, where a wife, one son and one daughter survive him. He had been in the city but one day, having come here on his way to Denver where he was expecting to settle some trouble he was having with United States authorities regarding timber lands. Nothing he had said would lead to the belief that he was contemplating suicide.

He was last seen alive at 11 o'clock in the morning when he passed upstairs to his room without a word to any occupant of the house. He had evidently just purchased the morphine which did the work. It was in an eighth ounce bottle of which half the contents was missing. On the person of the dead man were found papers showing him to have been a civil war veteran. But little money was found in his pockets, and as he was known to have been somewhat short of funds, it may have induced a fit of despondency during which he ended his life.

For twelve years Crandall had lived on a ranch about seven miles north of Berwind following the lumber business and farming. He had recently gotten into trouble with the United States land office regarding some timber cutting on government lands which had caused him considerable worry although it was not of sufficient moment to give rise to any rash act. At a late hour last night the family had not been heard from and the remains are held awaiting instructions from them.
