PUEBLO — Technology changes all the time and sometimes, it may feel hard to keep up. Colorado State University (CSU) Pueblo and the Pueblo Library District have started a 'Digital Navigator' program.

People can team up with experts to receive free help for their hardware and software questions.

"We are able to pair them one on one (help) instead of behind a desk," said Nick Potter with the Pueblo City-County Library District. "We are able to setup an appointment, somebody can sit down, take a concerted amount of time with them and help them through whatever problem or issue they may have... and leave empowered."

A federal grant is paying for the program. CSU Pueblo will use the $2 million to buy up-to-date equipment, which includes the following:

- laptops
- 3D printers
- different cameras

PUEBLO — A doctor in Pueblo is being recognized for her impact on the medical community. Dr. Michele Sweeney moved to Pueblo in 1980 and worked at Parkview Medical Center as an Emergency Physician until 2001.

She's also taught students at Pueblo Community College for the last 24 years, training hundreds of students who are now in the medical field.

"I am proud that I can take knowledge, pass it on in a way people understand and they go out and they save people's lives," said Dr. Sweeney.

Dr. Sweeney and 38 other women will receive the Pueblo Library District's Outstanding Women Award at a ceremony on March 20 at the Downtown Library.

Honoring Impactful Women in Pueblo at Annual Outstanding Women Award Ceremony

Today, the Pueblo Library District celebrated 39 remarkable women who have made significant contributions to the community during the annual Outstanding Women Award ceremony. This year marks the 36th anniversary of the event, recognizing over 700 inspiring women since its inception.
