LAST SESSION OF JURY TODAY

Letters Are Received From Anxious Parents' Missing Sons--- No Bodies Recovered.

At 10 o'clock this morning 50 witnesses examined by the coroner's jury will appears before the body for the purpose of reading and signing their testimony. This will get everything out of the way for the meeting of the jury to be held at 2 o'clock this afternoon at which time it is probable that the concluding discussion will be had and the verdict completed and signed. Two closed sessions of the jury were held yesterday. At these meetings the various points of evidence were carefully gone over for the purpose of getting it in shape for the drawing of the final conclusions that will be set forth in the verdict.

The sessions yesterday were confined to the jury alone. These sessions have been necessitated by the large amount of testimony taken during the investigation and the numerous points brought out, which will have to be given attention in the final decision. Judging from the amount of work already put on the case the verdict will be one of the most comprehensive and at the same time specific declarations ever rendered by a coroner's jury in Pueblo county.

Yesterday, one of the trunks recovered from the wreck, and remaining unclaimed, was turned over to Coroner Fugard. No marks were to be found that would make possible identification and it was subsequently opened by the coroner, when it was discovered that it had belonged to Mrs. Gartland, who, with three of her children, were killed in the disaster. It contained many little trinkets that had belonged to the children, a pair of gold bracelets, pearl opera glasses, several little gold chains and necklaces and clothing. The clothing was all taken from the trunk and thouroughly dried and will be sent to the surviving husband and father in Denver.

Think Two Perished.

Evidence has been received that William Miller and Bruce Brown of Hamilton, Ohio, were certainly among the missing lost in the Eder wreck. They were reported as missing the second day after the calamity, but the evidence was not strong enough to cause worry. Samuel D. Spencer of this city yesterday received a letter from C. L. Whittaker of Hamilton, saying that the fathers of the two boys, after making inquiries at every possible point where they had last been heard from, decided that they had been traveling on a Colorado train on the day of the disaster. Both young men were in the habit of corresponding with their parents at short intervals.

Miller heard from his son for the last time from St. Louis, the letter telling him that he was on his way to Colorado in company with Brown. The latter had been visiting friends in Cleveland, Ohio, and was on his way to join his father, who is secretary and treasurer of the California Paper and Board mills, in San Francisco.

That both young men should have disappeared so suddenly and at the same time while in Colorado is the chief cause of worry. They have not yet been traced definitely to the train, but it is known that they were spending several days in touring at points of interest in the state before taking the direct journey to California.
