LONGEST PROCESSION IN YEARS FOLLOWS THREE BODIES TO GRAVE

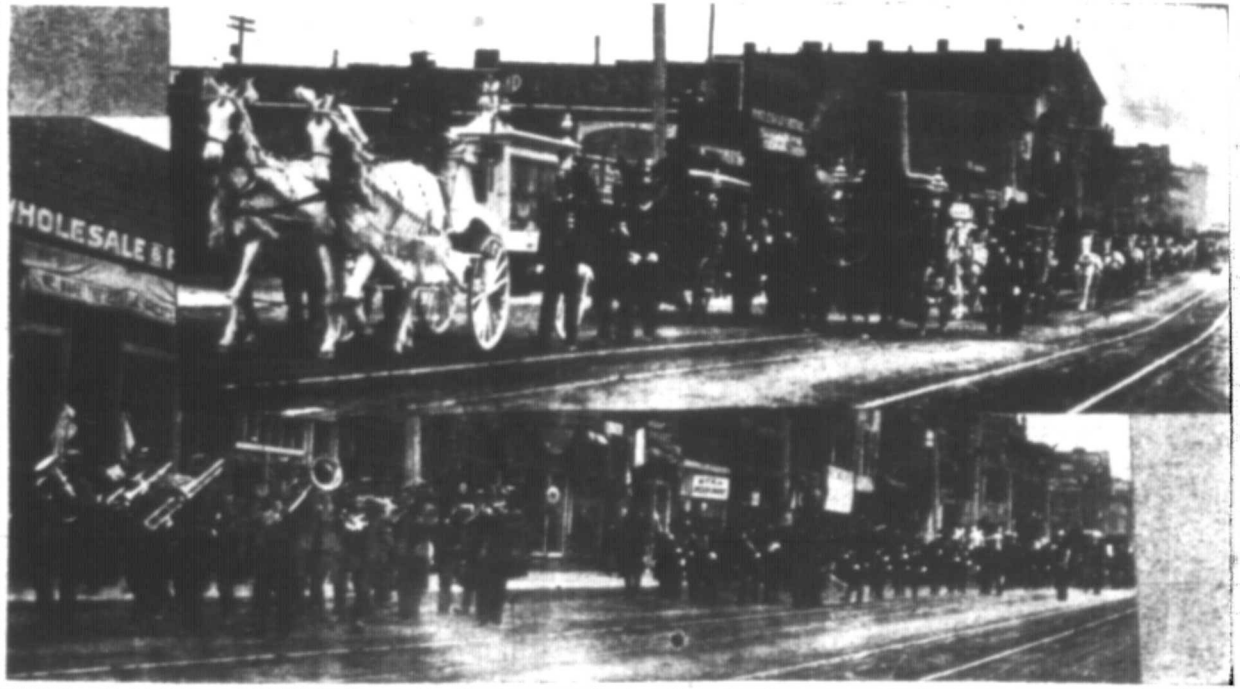

Burial Services of Italians Killed by Train Most Impressive--- Hundreds of Sorrowing Friends Pay Last Tribute to the Dead.

With the Pueblo Slavonian band at the head and followed by over 300 countrymen, the triple funeral of Guisippe Guglielmo, Joe Guglielmo and Albert Aranone, the three Italian victims of the C. & S. collision at Salt Creek last Saturday night, wended its way through the streets of the city yesterday afternoon. The cortege was probably the largest that has been seen in this city, and the second triple funeral that has taken place in Pueblo for years.

Three Italian societies attended the funeral in full dress uniforms, and the procession was a very imposing one, and the street cars were blocked for some time until the long line of marchers, hacks, private vehicles and other conveyances had passed by. Every hack and other vehicle owned by local liveries was engaged, and the region within three blocks of the undertaking parlors was packed with the carriages.

When the procession started the white hearse, in which was a snow white casket with the remains of young Aranone, headed the cortege, and the two black hearses with the bodies of the two Guglielmos followed, one on each side of the street.

The line of march was from McMahon & Collier's parlors to Second and Main streets, thence to Santa Fe avenue and south to Mount Carmel church, where the services began at 2 o'clock, after which the procession, fully one mile in length, proceeded to Roselawn burial park, where the triple interment took place.
