It is said that the trouble started when Brennan arrived at the machine shops to do some work, and the fact piece of iron or steel on the floor of the shops. Six stitches were taken to close up the wounds in his head.

Jury Has Begun an Investigation

The coroner's jury in the investigation of the accident at the steel works Monday adjourned yesterday afternoon until 10 o'clock this morning. Six witnesses were examined yesterday and as many more will be called today. A thorough investigation will be made under the direction of Assistant District Attorney Wells and an effort made to determine the true cause of the accident which resulted in the death of four men. Yesterday afternoon the jury visited the converter at the steel works and drawings were made of the ladles, mixer, cranes, platforms, etc., in the converter and these drawings proved a great help to the jury and those conducting the investigation when evidence was being introduced. Of the witnesses examined so far none have been able to give any information regarding the cause of the accident, but those summoned to testify today are expected to give evidence which will make it clear. The jury is composed of Barney Evans, foreman; Frank P. McLaughlin, William Wood, C. M. Walker, Anthony Bierer and Ottis Atterberry.

The funerals of the two Austrian victims of the accident, John Cruppelak and Steve Lepich, took place yesterday morning, and was largely attended by sorrowing friends and countrymen of the men. Father Adelbert conducted requiem high mass at St. Mary's church, and three societies took part in the ceremonies. At the church six little girls and six young ladies dressed in white preceded the caskets. There were 250 members of the societies in uniform in line as the cortege proceeded to Riverview cemetery.

AUSTRIANS QUIT WORK IN CONVERTER

Fifteen Austrians yesterday resigned their positions at the steel works. All were employed at the converter, where the fatal accident of Monday occurred. None of the men gave any cause for quitting, but drew their time without offering any explanations.

It is frequently the case at the steel works that men take a day off when a fatal accident occurs in the department where they are employed, but this is the first instance where a large number have quit in a body. It is an unwritten law of the structural iron workers' union that no work is to be done by their number on a day when one of their number is fatally injured, but in no other department of the work at the steel plant is this rule observed. The Austrians at the converter have been in dread ever since the accident occurred, but kept on working until yesterday, when they asked for their time and gave up their jobs.
