

to the big Sixth Avenue. It is no exaggeration to say that the productions staged there far exceed in magnitude those of any other theater in the world. It has been the ambition of Arthur Hays Sulzberger, the man who year after year sponsors these spectacles, to preserve a record of the accomplishments. He has been told it was impossible. Realizing it was simply a matter of installing lights of sufficient power, and believing that recent advances in the manufacture of lamps would justify the attempt, he determined to go ahead and reproduce the results. The screened results show that he was correct.

Under the technical guidance of William McGill, the director of the Feature Corporation, aided by Pratt, work was begun on the set of the Hippodrome on Sunday, March 1. During the week, between the hours of 9:30 and 12:30 in the morning, steady progress was made so that by the second Sunday of the month, with all the big ensembles had been photographed and attention was concentrated on the "close-up" work on small groups. It may be noted in this connection that the camera views in the Hippodrome show on will approximate the regular range of the ordinary studio. The stage of the Hippodrome, being 110 feet from the foot of the back wall. It is 200 feet in order to include within the range of the lens four-fifths of this area it was necessary to place the camera up in the balcony and back. The lens used was a 50-
