you pay your men starvation wages ($1.32 per day) then they must work for the same wages, since the Philadelphia and other smelters can not enter into successful competition with you and pay their labor more than you do. Your argument that it is no one's business what your men work for but your own and your men's, is too silly for serious consideration. Every man's wages is governed by what his fellow worker receives. This proposition is self evident. As to your smelter never starting again we should be sorry to see that, of course, and we, to be perfectly candid, don't believe it, but should it not, there are brick, mortar, iron and stone yet in the country and men with plenty of money, who will be only too glad to build and operate another and larger smelter in our city and pay decent wages. As to the business men standing by you; you simply ask of them, will you help me force my men to a wage basis where they can buy only overalls, bacon and flour. Mr. Eilers, the business man isn't a fool.
