Alderman Haruff was doubtful if the city had a right to charge a license as the venders's material was raw when received and manufactured on the premises.

The vender was transferred from every corner of the intersection of Third and Main streets to those of every crossing four blocks away, brought back again and left up in the air.

Repartee galore was passed by the councilmen. When a vote was started on the amendment to the amendment that amended the former amendment that was amended by that one the matter was left and the order of business resumed.
