Mrs. William Shallcross Speed, was slugged on the head, her maid, Ann Woolet, reported, by a sallow-faced man who entered the home last Wednesday night saying he had gone to repair the telephone.

Mrs. Stoll was confined in the house with a cold and wore only a negligee. She was allowed to wear a light coat before she left. The kidnaper spent an hour or more in the home, according to reports from the maid. Mr. Stoll had not returned from his office. Mrs. Stoll offered the man a check to leave, the maid told police, but he refused and struck her. "If Berry comes, I'll kill him," the maid said the man threatened.

"Let's go then," Mrs. Stoll was said to have declared. She left the house and was driven off in a car.

Kentucky's greatest manhunt began. Hundreds of clues, most of them false, were run down. There was half a dozen reports of women with bandaged heads having been seen in automobiles and each had to be checked.

The family made frantic appeals to the kidnaper thru the press and over the radio.

Their demeanor varied from time to time from that of almost complete despair to an expression of hope. A feeling of anxiety, strongly manifest last night, turned to one of optimism Tuesday.
