SENIOR CONDUCTOR DIES.

Allen Lichtenberger Was One of the Oldest Street Railway Men.

During the past week the City Railway company lost by death its senior conductor, Allen Lichtenberger. For two years previous to the inauguration of the electric system he was employed on the horse car line. From first to last his character was most estimable. To the company he was ever faithful, to passengers always courteous and obliging. As a husband and father he was a model of devotion. Worn down by nursing his wife who had been sick with fever, he himself was prostrated with the same disease and quickly yielded to its fatal progress Tuesday morning, September 3. The funeral services, conducted by Rev. J. C. Hay, pastor of the Central Christian church, were held in Olin's undertaking rooms Wednesday at 2:30 p. m., and were attended by a considerable number of friends of the deceased. The superintendent, secretary and thirty of the employes of the street railway company were present. Mrs. Lichtenberger and the three children have the sympathy of many under their heavy affliction.
