A KILLING AT VICTOR.

Two Men Shot, and One of Them is Dead.

WAS KILLED ON THE TRAIN.

A Constable Wounds One Man with an Accidental Shot—He Afterward Shoots Another Who Was Trying to Effect the Release of Men Who Were Under Arrest.

Cripple Creek, Colo., March 12.—(Special.)—Things were lively at Victor for a while this evening, and as a result one man, Patrick Looney, a miner, is dead, and Seth Ralston has a bullet hole in his cheek.

This afternoon Constable Frank Lupton went into a saloon at Victor to arrest one McQuade on a warrant for a minor offense committed some time ago. McQuade's friends objected strenuously to the arrest being made before the warrant was read. Seth Ralston, a miner, made threats that McQuade could not be taken away. Lupton drew his revolver, which went off, accidentally, he says, and the bullet struck Ralston in the cheek.

Lupton then took McQuade to the justice court and went back for Ralston and took him to the court. Bond was fixed at $200 in each case.

Both men refused to give bail, the crowd shouting in angry tones that if they were jailed the crowd would tear down the calaboose and release them. Lupton concluded to take his prisoners to Cripple Creek for safe keeping, and boarded the 5:45 p. m. suburban train, taking the prisoners into the rear coach. An angry crowd had gathered at the depot and shouted that the train could not pull out with the prisoners aboard. One man got into the engine cab and held a revolver at the engineer's head and told him not to start.

Lupton learning of this started forward to arrest the man on the engine, but he ran away. The train then pulled out for Cripple Creek. When it had gone about a mile the bell cord was pulled for the engineer to stop, and the train came to a stand. As it slacked up two passengers jumped out of the front coach and went to the rear car. They first tried the front door, but finding it locked went to the rear platform. Just as Looney got to this door with a re volver in his hand Lupton fired, shooting him through the heart, and he rolled off dead.
