Old Engineer Passes Away

D. W. Lusink, one of the oldest Denver and Rio Grande engineers running between Pueblo, Leadville and Glenwood Springs, died at his home, 21 block V, early last evening, age 56.

Deceased had been ill for several days, but hope was expressed for his recovery until yesterday afternoon, when he gradually sank. He was born in Rochester, N. Y., and came to Colorado many years ago. For the last fifteen years he had pulled a passenger train between Pueblo, Leadville and Glenwood Springs.

Decedent was a member of Pueblo lodge, No. 90, B. P. O. E., the O. L. E., the Yeomen, and the Knights of Pythias at Leadville. He is survived by a wife and daughter in Pueblo and a daughter, Mrs. W. J. Twinkle in Climax, N. Y. The remains are at McMahon & Collier's. Funeral announcement will be made later.
