A creepy, kooky kickoff

Creatures of the night crawled to the Rawlings Library on October 3 to kick off All Pueblo Reads.

This year's literacy program centers on Bram Stoker's classic novel "Dracula", paired with its modern prequel, "Dracul", co-written by Dacre Stoker, Bram Stoker's great-grandnephew. Together, these two works bridge past and present, offering readers a rich blend of gothic storytelling, mystery and imagination.

The day was filled with book giveaways of "Dracul" and "Dracula", interactive booths, community partners, exhibits, including books from the Stoker estate, and a presentation from the Rocky Mountain Paranormal Society.

"We couldn't have dreamed up a more bewitching kickoff! Our library branches rose to the occasion with creative, community-driven activities, and the Rocky Mountain Paranormal Society cast a spell on the crowd with their fascinating presentation on Colorado Supernatural Tales and Lore. All Pueblo Reads is always a community celebration, but this year? It was a fang-tastic success we won't soon forget!" said Amanda Daile, PCCLD's program and events manager.

All Pueblo Reads author Rich Moyer gives his author talk at Cedar Ridge Elementary School in October.

Moyer's "Ham Helsing: Vampire Hunter" comes from a long line of monster-hunting descendants, but Ham prefers a cozy, relaxed approach to life. When tragedy strikes, it's up to Ham to continue the family legacy. His first task? Hunting a vampire. A tale full of laughs and bravery, this story shows the power of believing in yourself and others.

During their school visits, Newquist and Moyer shared their knowledge and skills to encourage the next generation of readers in both school districts.

All Pueblo Reads annual literacy project crosses cultural, generational, and socioeconomic lines by featuring selected books to read in the community. Adult readers have been devouring the gothic thriller "Dracul" by Dacre Stoker, great-grand nephew of Bram Stoker, and J.D. Barker as well as the classic "Dracula" by Bram Stoker
