

Kathryn Osterman and Sada Weethein in "The Night of the Play"
Tonight at the Grand Opera House

ports it is not only the best vehicle which Miss Osterman has ever had but one of the best on the American stage. Nancy Brasher, in which role Miss Osterman appears, conceives the plot of a play and it is worked out with the assistance of Robert Keefe, author and playwright, which character is ably handled by William A. Williams. of the plot some exceedingly funny situations are developed. A distinct feature of the production for the women principally is the gowns worn by Kathryn Osterman. In the last act she appears in a directoire gown of gold cloth that is gorgeous. Her interpretation of the role of Nancy Brasher is convincing.
