ERIO, COLORADO

Annericans were the first to inhabit the area that is now Puello, Pueblo means "village" in Spanish, which is an appropriate name for an area that was seitled in the early 1800s by people from New Mexico with Spanish and Native American roots. Credit for its name goes to James Beckwourth, an African American and early mountaineer, who helped build fort "El Puello" in 1842 with American merchants. The gold rush of 1858 brought in the first influx of people who saw more opportunity in Puello than in the goldfields. Having the vision to build a great city with railroads, a steel mill, and smelters, Puello secame known as the "Pittsburgh of the West." Employment and usiness opportunities brought immigrants from all over the world, making it a diverse city. The community has persevered through natural disasters and economic turned, and Puello has thrived in each chapter of its Instory.

The Special Collections Department of the Pueblo City-County thrary District has selected iconic images from its extensive hotograph archives that document the history of Pueblo. Charlene burca Simins is the genealogy and special collections librarian, and Maria Sanche: Tucker is the manager of special collections and useum services.

The Images of America series celebrates the history of neighborhoods, towns, and cuties across the country. Using archival photographs, each title presents the distinctive stories from the past that shape the character of the community today. Arcadia is proud to play a part in the preservation of local heritage, making history available to all.
