MANY CHANGES AT THE STEEL WAGON WORKS

R. M. Waite, manager of the works of the Steel Wheel and Wagon company, has tendered his resignation and will remove to Denver, where he will re-enter the employ of the Colorado Fuel and Iron company, taking the position which he vacated to become the head of the wagon company. Mr. Waite was for some time assistant to President Kebler and when that gentleman retired from the headship of the fuel company, Mr. Waite accepted the position of manager of the wagon company, President Hearne, feeling the need of competent assistance, called Mr. Waite back to his old post.

It is not known who will be selected as manager of the works to succeed Mr. Waite, but Superintendent Extell will continue in active charge until the directorate has acted in the matter.

Considerable improvement has been recently made in the construction of steel wheels for wagons manufactured at the plant. Under the old arrangement of spokes in the wheels it was

NELSON BOWMAN, EDITOR, PRINTER AND PIONEER

Death Claims One of the Most Esteemed Oldtimers of the Arkansas Valley.

Death has again invaded the ranks of Colorado's pioneers, this time carrying away a veteran editor and printer, Nelson A. Bowman, who for years has been associated with the typos of Pueblo. As a result of a siege of typhoid fever, which attacked him the latter part of June, he died yesterday afternoon at his home, 316 east Third street.

Until a few days ago hopes for his recovery were entertained, but the fever had made such inroads into his constitution that recovery was impossible. He died as bravely as he had lived, consistent to the views he entertained during his long and useful career.

With his death a picturesque figure has been taken away from the newspaper world, and one of the advance guard of higher civilization in Colorado has been removed. Coming to the state more than 30 years ago, he was from then until the day of his death numbered among the progressive spirits which made Colorado and the Arkansas Valley what they are today. Bringing west with him a broad knowledge of his craft, printing, he soon made himself a power in the then new community and during his career as editor he was faithful to the old ideals of newspaperdom.

Later he turned again to his craft, and for the last twelve years of his life was foreman of the ad room of the Chieftain. For many years he was "daddy" of the Chieftain composing room "chapel," which is an honor accorded by the printers to the most worthy and trusted of their number. Wholesouled, generous, broad minded and lovable, his death will be mourned by all who knew him.

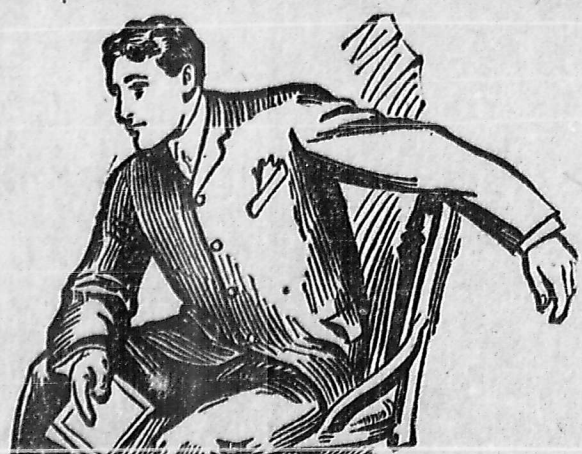

There are many who are not now in Pueblo who will remember most kindly the daddy of the Chieftain chapel. These are the wanderers of the Typographical union known as "tourist printers." Many of them will remember that in "Old Nels" they found a friend ever ready to give them a helping hand and a "sit" whereby they might rid themselves of the "wrinkles." Nels is gone, but not before he had builded to his memory monuments without number in the hearts of his friends.

Nelson H. Bowman was born in Gentry county, Missouri, December 22, 1850, his father being a well known Methodist minister in Gentry county at that time. On August 28, 1870, he was married to Miss Anna Pinkston at Forrest City, Mo. Three children were born of this union, a daughter, now deceased, and two sons, Lee J., and Edward S., both residing in Pueblo at the present time.

Mr. Bowman, accompanied by his family, came to Colorado May 1, 1873, and settled at the original town of Las Animas, where, in partnership with his brother, C. W. Bowman, he founded the Las Animas Leader, a weekly paper which thrived under their management for several years, when the brothers sold the plant, came to Pueblo and started the Commercial Standard and Live Stock Review. The deceased later disposed of his interest in the Pueblo paper and moved to La Junta and purchased the Tribune. Another successful newspaper venture in which he was interested was the Bent County Democrat, and after remaining in the capacity of editor and publisher of this paper for three years he came to Pueblo again in 1886, and from that date until the time he became ill last June he was connected with the mechanical department of the Chieftain.

During his newspaper career in the capacity of editor he was a strong factor in the manipulation of things politically, always a Democrat in national affairs and acting according to his views of right and wrong in state, county and city politics. The only reward he ever received in connection with his political life was a term as chief clerk of the printing committee, house of representatives.

Two brothers survive him, C. W. Bowman, of La Veta, former representative from Huerfano county. The latter arrived in the city last night and the brother at Washington will reach Pueblo as soon as he can make the journey. Arrangements for the funeral have not yet been made, but the services will probably be conducted under the auspices of the I. O. O. F. lodge and the Woodmen of the World, of both of which the deceased was a member in good standing.

The Business Suit

Is after all the one we should be most particular about. It is the Ignorant of Pass Uses.

Special to The Chieftain.

Telluride, Nov. 28.—The two men who were arrested by the troops this afternoon were turned loose late tonight. It was proven that they had military passes permitting them to go through the lines but the men did not know to what use the passes were meant and they hid them in their pockets and tried to slip through.
