LOOK WELL.

There is a knack in making glasses becoming. That is part of my business. I study the face and features. I select lenses of the right size, and frames of the right proportion. Some faces look better with the eye glasses while others look better with riding bows. However, it all depends upon the person. The features and general appearance must be taken into consideration. The lines and lineaments of the face must be thought of every time an eyeglass spring is selected or bent to shape. Proportion and harmony must be remembered in deciding upon the size of the lens. Above all the glasses must stand in just the right position, so that the head may be carried easily and comfortably. They must be convenient and comfortable. Let me show you the kind that suits
