Three Men From Pueblo Taken in Denver.

Denver, March 17. (Special.)—The police today arersted three men who will be sent to Pueblo tomorrow as suspects in connection with the murder in that city Sunday night. Two of them en were captured by Detectives Carberry and Saunders. They gave their names as William Stroller and W. J. White. Stroller is a cook and an ex-convict. He was sent up from Pueblo in 1892. White is a laborer and also an ex-convict. The appearance of the men agrees with that given in Pueblo.

The third man is John O'Keefe. He was arrested at the request of the Pueblo police. He admits having left Pueblo but recently, but claims that he left there before Sunday night.

The house appropriations committee recommended an appropriation og $5,000 as a reward fund to be used by the governor in offering rewards for criminals.

The Care of Food

(By Mary B. Keech.)

Many cooks and housekeepers do not realize the importance of keeping food covered. Many articles of food are ready absorbers of gases, and after standing uncovered for an hour or two are positively harmful to take into the stomach.

Uncovered milk and butter are a menace to family health. They should never be kept in a damp or musty place or in a cellar where there are decaying vegetables or near fish, onions or any odorous substances. It is a wise plan to always keep a dish of pulverized charcoal near where milk and butter are kept. Charcoal is an absorber of gases and will purify the atmosphere where unwholesome gases are liable to exist. The charcoal should be often renewed. Butter and milk utensils should never be used for any other article of food. The fine flavor of good butter and milk is often destroyed by these articles being put into dishes which have been used for odorous articles of food.

Flour absorbs odors readily; it should be kept closely covered in a cool, dry, well ventilated room, where the temperature never falls to the freezing point.

Jellies, jams, etc., absorb poisonous gases, and should be kept closely covered.

All fruit should be washed and pared before eating or cooking. Berries, grapes, etc., which are not pared should be washed. Upon fruit there is often an accumulation of impurities in the form of dust.

Water which has been standing uncovered a few hours or over night should never be used for drinking or culinary purposes. A receptacle of water standing uncovered in a poorly ventilated room will in a few hours absorb enough foul gases and organic impurities to render it utterly filthy.

German Navy's Personnel.

As is the personnel of the German navy—up-to-date and admirable in quality—so are its ships and material. In our British dockyards you will find plant and machinery of twenty years ago; not so in Germany, where the motto always is: "Full steam ahead." It is true that hitherto the German battleships have, like the French, been deficient in sea-going quality and coal supply, but that was because Germans ten years ago scarcely realized the pos-
