Discover: A better library experience

by Jon Walker

Amazon is among the most prominent of contemporary American business success stories. Many consider it to be the undisputed leader in the modern age of online retail. An important reason for Amazon’s achievement is the company’s priority for making it easy for customers to buy via the internet. Amazon itself credits this to customer focus—constantly striving to provide the highest customer satisfaction. As a result their digital shopping experience is captivating and compelling. This is a goal for the Library, too. This month we launch a tool to provide an Amazon-like online experience to find Library books and materials. It should delight our users.

The new service is Discover. It is the traditional Library catalog reimagined. It has been in the making for several years. Our partner to bring this to the local community is Colorado’s Turning Leaf Technologies. Discover is an innovative library online public access catalog designed for maximum usability.

Discover has four main goals in mind. First is to maximize patron use of all library materials. Our libraries have a wealth of accessible information, and too often it is very difficult to uncover. Discover eases this significantly. It is tuned to make it uncomplicated for you to find what you seek. It also makes “read alike” and “view alike” recommendations based upon your personal preferences. This functionality helps you uncover new materials you had not previously known.

The second goal is integration both with the Library’s physical holdings (like books and DVDs) and our online holdings (for example, eBooks, eAudiobooks and streaming music and films). The traditional model forces users to learn multiple platforms to find library materials. This is inconvenient because the Library provides so many different sources and formats of materials.

Discover integrates these so you find what you want in a single user experience.

Goal three is to make it easy for you. Discover was developed with the help of a number of in-person usability studies. Discover developers sat with real patrons one-on-one to see how they use the Library catalog, what they find confusing, and what they wish the catalog did. This research informed the design of the system and how it works. The interface is fully responsive to virtually any device from full desktops to smartphones.

Discover includes “type ahead” and “search suggestions” to make it easy for you to find materials even if you don’t know exact spellings. The onscreen layout utilizes subtle word and color choices, fonts and button placement to guide your use of the Library catalog more effectively.

The final goal is to make Discover work well for OUR library. There are literally thousands of libraries (more than 7,000 public libraries in the United States alone). We wanted Discover to serve our patrons best. So thought is given to local preferences.

I am certain you will like Discover. My objective is for you to be captivated. Discover becomes available on September 12 when you can simply go to www.pueblolibrary.org and look for the Discover button near the top of the page.
